Several Earth-Like Planets Discovered Orbiting Nearby Star

When astronomers eyeball little stars twinkling through their telescopes, they now know for certain that circling around some of them are worlds not unlike our own.

On Wednesday, an international research team using both ground and space-based telescopes announced they'd discovered a solar system 40 light-years away with seven Earth-size planets revolving around a small star.

It's possible that the innermost three planets have "limited regions" with conditions amenable to liquid water, according to the new study published in the journal Nature.
